1. The arrest and confinement in the El Dorado Penal Colony of 23 minor political figures by the Venezuelan government on [REDACTED] caused generally unfavorable reaction in both high and low circles of society and caused mixed reaction within the Venezuelan Army. One of the reasons for this unfavorable reaction was that the El Dorado Penal Colony had previously been used for the confinement of habitual criminals rather than of political prisoners. The persons arrested could be classified as liberal to Communist in ideology. All available copies of the Communist-line weekly Morrocov Azul were confiscated when the paper published a protest on [REDACTED], signed by a large number of doctors, lawyers, teachers and newspapermen, against the government's action. Inasmuch as this action occurred immediately prior to [REDACTED], the fourth anniversary of the revolution which placed the Accion Democratica in power, the feeling of political uncertainty in Venezuela has increased.

2. The Venezuelan government had planned on exiling an additional group of persons to Mexico on [REDACTED]. However, the wives and relatives of these persons protested so strongly to the Minister of Interior that the group has not yet been deported. Police at the Minister's office who refused to execute orders were reportedly arrested.
